TWILIGHT SAGA: BREAKING DAWN PART I

Edward & Bella

It seems like the days when young girls fantasized about Prince Charmings coming to sweep them off their feet are long gone and have been replaced by sparkly, slightly melodramatic vampires. Gone are the days when women of all ages desired a somewhat functional relationship; the new trend seems to be leaning toward wanting dysfunctional relationships, preferably the kind where your potential other views you as a main course meal—and I don't mean that in the dirty way either.

But alas, I digress. If you haven't seen any of the other Twilight Saga movies, allow me to bring you up to speed. Basically, Girl meets Vampire, Vampire has trouble deciding whether or not he wants to kill Girl or love her (he ends up choosing the latter); then Werewolf steps in and tries to steal Girl from Vampire, which proves to be unsuccessful because Girl and Vampire love each other far too much to ever have their love be severed by another... and that is basically where they left off.

Breaking Dawn: Part 1 continues the Twilight Saga; Edward Cullen (Robert Pattinson) and Bella Swan (Kristen Stewart) finally tie the knot, and promptly head off to their honeymoon, during which Bella discovers that she is pregnant with a half vampire, half human baby. Because the case is so rare, there isn't much anyone can do to help her deal with the excruciating pain—the baby is far too strong and her human body is not physically capable of bearing the child. The matter is further complicated when Jacob Black (Taylor Lautner) steps into the picture. Despite his natural hatred for vampires, Jacob finds it difficult to turn his back

Kensington Community Church (KCC), United Church of Christ, celebrated the season with its second annual Las Posadas in Kensington Sat., Dec. 3. Put on by the church's Middle and High School Youth Group, the outdoor reenactment of the Christmas story featured a candlelit community procession with the angel, Mary, Joseph and the donkey as they were turned away by innkeepers at Kensington Café and Starbucks. Throngs followed Mary and Joseph as they walked down a luminaria-lined street to a Live Nativity and Carol Sing in front of Kensington Community Church. After the event, church members, neighbors and friends enjoyed tamales, piñatas and a petting zoo.
